

FOOD BLOG

Hy!! Friend, this is my first and hopefully the last food blog. Let's hope so.

Do you guys know in Delhi, there is a place called Dilli Haat Ina, which is near to metro station only . so we went there with my Food science buddies. There are lots of things to do there like shopping and food stalls, and they also have theme food stalls.

I genuinely like trying new foods from various states. The flavor was fantastic.

Momo

We started off by eating steamed momos at the eatery in Meghalaya. Their demonstration was passable. The flavor of the momos was highly delicious.

After this, we went to

Thukpa

FOOD BLOG

Which state food is thukpa?

Thukpa is a soupy dish that originated in eastern Tibet. It is a combination of Tibetan-style noodles with vegetables or chicken stew in clear soup. I initially mistook it for soup with added noodles when I first saw it, but when I tried it, it was so wonderful, and I really adored it.

Golgappa

Our lovely golgappa which is loved by everyone Golgappa originated around Uttar Pradesh and Bihar about 100-125 years ago. I adored how it was stuffed with so many different chutneys and flavours. I tried it, and it was simply mouth feels dissolved

DOSA

I love dosa. Somehow this time I didn't like it this time , the shop stall man was not knowing how to make dosa.

Then we went for

Fruit Beer

FOOD BLOG

Fruit beer doesn't have a well-defined past like the majority of other varieties and flavours of beer. It's likely that at some point along the route, someone wondered what would happen if they added strawberries or oranges to their beer, and that's how fruit beer came to be.

it was so wonderful, and I really adored it.

The goal of consuming new foods, in my opinion, is to better comprehend the variations between the eating habits of various states. It will also enable us to better understand our own tastes and develop them further. The ability to combine elements from two or more distinct cuisines will also allow us create our own recipes. Additionally, after experimenting with a variety of dishes, we can discover a new favourite dish. This could allow us to swap out some unhealthy foods for healthier ones and move us closer to a diet that is balanced. When we go to new places, it will also help us accept a wider variety of food and appreciate the variety of cuisines.